A Kilgore man was held Thursday on bonds totaling $220,500, accused by police of kidnapping a woman and sexually assaulting her multiple times on New Year's Eve.
Police said Caimbrian Austin Walker, 22, of Kilgore threatened the woman's family in order to lure her to his residence, held her against her will, assaulted her and then raped her four times Dec. 31.

Walker called the woman during her shift at her workplace and told her he knew her grandparents were in town and "insisted that she come and see him if she did not want any further trouble," according to an arrest warrant.

The woman met Walker when her shift ended about 7 a.m. on New Year's Eve, the warrant said.

The woman told police Walker instructed her to drive to an acquaintance’s house and park. He then hit her several times in the face and head and stuck his finger in her right eye, she said.

He then forced the woman to move to the back seat of her vehicle and took her keys, money and cellphone, the warrant said.

She told police that he drove her to the Executive Inn on U.S. 259 in Kilgore and rented a room in the woman's name. He insisted she stay at the inn and sexually assaulted her four times that night, she told police.

The next morning, Walker drove to his residence and sneaked the woman inside, the warrant said. She told police they slept there until about 4 p.m. Jan. 1, when she begged Walker to let her leave, and he agreed, under the stipulation she would not report the incident to police, the warrant said.

Walker also is being held on warrants revoking his bond for charges of assault causing bodily injury, three counts of violating a protective order and evading arrest.
Walker was arrested by Gregg County sheriff’s deputies about 7:40 p.m. Tuesday at his home in Kilgore.
